OBJECTION

The wterworks site has always been of great biodiversity and amenity value to the area. When the filter beds were operational they provided habitat for a lot of insects, which in turn supported the House Martins that nested along the houses facing the Park; and the many bats that roosted in the park or in the New River tunnel off Station Road. It is designated as Metroplitan Open land, which you'd think should propect it in perpetuity. At least half the land should be left for the valuable wildlife that thrives in this area.

Leave it alone
